

Merger Agreement

Clariant and Huntsman agree to combine forces

PRATTELN/THE WOODLANDS (ask) _Clariant and Huntsman Corporation jointly announced their definitive agreement to combine forces on May 22. The closing of the envisaged deal is expected by the end of this year, depending on the timing of the respective approvals and satisfaction of other closing conditions. The new company shall be named HuntsmanClariant and the global headquarters are intended to be in Pratteln, Switzerland, while operational headquarters are intended to be in The Woodlands, Texas. Chairman of the Board shall be Hariolf Kottmann, CEO of the new company shall be Peter R. Huntsman, currently President and CEO of Huntsman Corporation. By uniting two strong R&D capacities and global presences, the combined business would enhance its global reach, innovation power, customer value creation and risk diversification. The new company will have an enterprise value of approximately 20 billion USD and be a leading specialty chemicals company with leading market positions in most segments. It will have a more diversified portfolio and market exposure to accelerate growth. Top managements, the boards and key shareholders of both parties are fully in favor of the merger.

Additional background information on the merger of equals

SULZBACH (ask) _Hariolf Kottmann: “This is the perfect deal at the right time. Our combined forces with more than 28,000 highly skilled and motivated employees and a broader geographic footprint with over 200 sites will make us ready for new and very attractive growth opportunities. We intend to combine Huntsman’s strength in the US with Clariant’s force in Europe and strengthen our operations in Asia. Peter Huntsman and I share the same strategic vision about succeeding with sustainable innovation addressing unmet market needs. And our companies show a close cultural fit. From Clariant’s viewpoint this merger of equals is the consequent next step in becoming a leader in specialty chemicals.”

Finding the right partner

“Since 2008, we have worked hard to transform our company into the “New Clariant”, a corporation that stands for Excellence, Innovation and Sustainability. This transformation was unavoidable and it has long since started to bear fruit. Your contribution over the past years now pays off. I am convinced that with our current set-up we can do a lot more. Our organization — including our innovation management, our sustainability approach, Clariant Excellence, and Global Business Services — delivers high performance. However, the cost base is high for a company of our size. That’s why a bold step is logical, but only with the right fit. We have found it with Huntsman. The combination could create a top company with higher strategic flexibility, more resilience against competition and strong cash flow for further strategic moves.

For the time being, nothing changes and both companies continue to be competitors. Only after closing of the merger will the two companies combine their strengths. A merger team will be nominated to work out a roadmap for the time after closing. Employees will be informed about all key milestones.”

Huntsman Corporation, with its headquarters in The Woodlands, Texas is a manufacturer and marketer of chemical products for both end consumers and industrial customers. The company manufactures polyurethanes, performance products, and pigments for a wide-range of major national and international customers.

“This is the perfect deal at the right time. Our combined forces with over 200 sites will make us ready for new and very attractive growth opportunities.”

FAQ about HuntsmanClariant plans

How are the announced savings of USD 400 million expected to be realized?

USD 400 million full synergy run-rate are expected to be achieved within two years of closing. Thereof, procurement synergies of USD 150 million by increased effectiveness of combined spend. In addition, we aim for operational synergies of USD 250 million by reducing costs through combining corporate functions and business services, as well as consolidation of asset footprint through shared infrastructure.

Do you plan to separate any business units post-merger?

Apart from the initial public offering of Venator (Huntsman’s Pigments and Additives business) which will be completed by Huntsman prior to the closing of the merger, there are currently no plans for the new HuntsmanClariant to separate other business units.

Can we make any statements towards customers about future products of the combined company?

For the time being nothing changes and both companies continue to be competitors. The closing of the transaction is expected to take place by year end. Until then we will continue our collaboration with customers as it is — both Clariant and Huntsman continue to be competitors until then. An official letter was sent to customers about the merger.

What are the benefits for the employees?

Employees will benefit greatly from an enlarged company and the envisaged new growth opportunities. But the vast majority of the employees of both companies will find a workplace in a bigger and more profitable company. Today, we are not able to provide any clarity around redundancies. We are very sensitive to this issue and we recognize how change can be unsettling. We have two incredible teams of talented people coming together. We will communicate more concerning possible impacts when we are able.

Editorial

Dear Colleagues,

The news that we are planning to form a new company with Huntsman came as a surprise to us all. I found it all the more impressive how naturally our processes have worked in response to the announcement. Everyone immediately knew what to do, and thus the information was passed on to all employees in a structured and timely manner in more than 35 town hall meetings in Europe.

I am aware that the news of the planned merger triggered uncertainties and fears in many units. The way in which the employees have responded, the questions that were asked and the way in which you have returned to your daily tasks show how constructively you deal with changes. It also demonstrates the self-assurance that we can draw from our successes in recent years. This is precisely the attitude one needs in order to handle this kind of situation in the best possible way. The level-headed reactions and opinions of the employee representatives have undoubtedly contributed to this, and for that I would like to extend my sincere thanks. There are still many unanswered questions that will remain unanswered for some time. Please continue to trust that we will inform you as promptly and as extensively as possible.

The things that we will continue to pursue without any change include all the measures derived from the results of the last employee survey. As part of a European steering committee that has already met twice, we are coordinating measures across functions, countries and business units and sharing experiences. I myself was able to report on favorable meetings during my visits to different sites. In this manner, I strive to encourage communication at the town hall events and also meet with colleagues for discussion in smaller groups. As I do so, I invariably meet with a high level of motivation and the will to achieve success as a company.

Yours sincerely, Oliver Kinkel
